

Jo Lindsay is senior lecturer and convenor of Sociology in the School of Political and Social Inquiry (PSI) at the Clayton campus of Monash University.

Jo Lindsay specializes in the sociology of families, youth and health. Her research interests include gender relations, work/family balance, consumption, health inequalities and social change.

In the youth field Jo has undertaken major research projects on young people and alcohol consumption, young workers and health risks in their social lives, sexual health knowledge and practices. In the families field she has undertaken research on unmarried cohabitation, lesbian families and work/life balance for workers in the nursing and construction industries. She is co-author (with Deb Dempsey) of Families, Relationships and Intimate life Oxford University Press 2009. For further information on current research projects and publications see <http://arts.monash.edu.au/sociology/staff/jlindsay.php>

